Jaffe/Peacock

Prerequisite: All Introductory Microeconomics Course or Permission of Instructor

This online course covers general applications of basic concepts, functions, and tools of management that contribute to success and improve individual performances in decision-making and other situations and problems in the field of management. The course is divided into two parts. In part I, the class discusses management as an open system, quality issues, planning, decision-making, and organizing. In part II, the class discusses staffing, motivation, teamwork, communication, and controlling issues. The second half of the course includes a group project working with other students on a business management plan. Throughout the course, issues are discussed to try and enable a win-win solution to problems and focuses on how to prevent problems (proactive) instead of solving problems (reactive).
